BIGGEST SHIFTS

One downgrade: natural gas drops to Bearish (-2) after the Commodity Weather Group flagged cooler forecasts with normal seasonal weather across the eastern two-thirds of the US for July 7-16 — that removes the heat-wave demand story that had been the bulls' main hope against a widening storage surplus and near-record production. Elsewhere the board is steady: crude holds its tight range on tentative ceasefire progress, the metals keep their Fed-repricing tailwind with a new China rotation flow in copper, and the grains' bull stories firmed on detail (wheat plantings now confirmed the lowest since records began in 1919; the China tariff move formalized as a reciprocal framework covering agriculture).

Crude Oil (WTI / Brent) -1 Leaning bearish

What's happening. WTI is little changed in its tight range after Qatar said the US and Iran made progress in talks, with traders looking past geopolitical headlines while supply normalizes — Saudi exports at 6.3M bbl/d (90% of pre-war) and UAE shipments nearly fully recovered (CNBC oil, OilPrice).

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) TradingView chatter is bearish and sell-skewed but camped on the $68-70 support zone, with retail stops clustered just below — a stop-run flush risk (TradingView Minds).

What it means. Ceasefire progress cuts both ways for sentiment: it removes the war-premium bid but also the tail risk that was keeping shorts honest. With supply nearly normalized, the market needs a demand story or an OPEC+ signal to escape this range; the $68-70 zone remains the technical tell.

Natural Gas -2 Bearish

What's happening. Downgraded. The Commodity Weather Group said forecasts shifted cooler, with normal seasonal weather now expected across the eastern two-thirds of the US from July 7-16 — on top of the bearish 87 Bcf injection (stocks ~6.2% above average) and near-record ~110 Bcf/d production (Investing.com, Trading Economics). LNG feedgas at ~17.3 Bcf/d is the remaining demand support.

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) Diverges from the news tone — trader polls skew bullish on the "bad news is priced in" thesis near multi-month lows (TradingView).

What it means. The one bullish catalyst on the near-term calendar (July heat) just got forecast away, leaving storage math in charge — that's a clean -2 setup. The contrarian crowd positioning is the counterweight: if the forecast flips back hot, the snap-back could be sharp. Thursday's EIA print and the next forecast runs are the catalysts.

Gold +1 Leaning bullish

What's happening. Gold sits around $4,140-4,166 after Monday's dollar-driven dip from two-week highs, with losses limited by the weak June payrolls (57k) that pinned September hike odds near 50%; central banks added a net 41t in May (Trading Economics, Kitco).

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) Mixed-to-bullish; StockTwits retail "extremely bullish" on miners, chatter flags short-term overbought conditions (TradingView Minds).

What it means. Holding pattern into Wednesday's Fed minutes — the macro tailwind is intact but already partly spent. Hawkish minutes are the risk to the +1; dovish ones open the two-week highs.

Silver +2 Bullish

What's happening. Silver is consolidating around $62.02 (-0.6% on the day) after opening the week at $62.90, digesting a ~6% two-session rebound from seven-month lows; the safe-haven bid and Fed repricing narrative are intact (Kitco, Mitrade/FXStreet).

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) Broadly bullish; StockTwits' SLV gauge bullish while GLD stays bearish; retail buying dips — uniformity itself a contrarian flag (StockTwits SLV).

What it means. A half-percent breather after a 6% run doesn't change the gradation — the coverage tone is still one of recovery with momentum. But silver is the board's most crowded bullish trade into the Fed minutes; it has the most to lose from a hawkish read.

Copper +1 Leaning bullish

What's happening. Copper holds near $6.17-6.20/lb, and a new supportive flow emerged: Chinese funds are rotating into metal stocks and futures ahead of expected solid first-half earnings from producers, adding to the Fed-repricing tailwind and South American concentrate-supply dents (Trading Economics, Investing.com).

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) Constructive; bullish bank targets (Citi ~$14,500/t) circulating in trader feeds (TradingView news).

What it means. The China rotation is flow, not yet fundamentals — but it's the first China-side positive in this cycle and nudges the bull case closer to complete. Hard China demand data (industrial production, inventory draws) remains the trigger for +2.

Wheat +2 Bullish

What's happening. Wheat extended its rally (~$6.00-6.08, +1.4% Monday, +2.6% on the month) as the acreage picture sharpened: USDA cut all-wheat plantings to 42.74M acres — down 5.7% from 2025 and the lowest in records going back to 1919 — against June 1 stocks that also missed, and an HRW crop already forecast smallest since 1957/58 (Trading Economics, Barchart, USDA ERS).

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) Polls lean bullish while large traders remain net short — short-covering fuel (TradingView wheat forums).

What it means. "Lowest plantings since 1919" is the kind of stat that anchors coverage for months — the structural bull case keeps strengthening. Still +2 rather than +3 because Black Sea supply remains ample and the US harvest is rolling in; a Black Sea crop problem is the +3 trigger.

Corn +2 Bullish

What's happening. Corn holds its one-month high (~$4.27-4.30) on the France heat damage (~1/3 of the crop hit), and the China story firmed up: both countries agreed to include agricultural products in a reciprocal tariff-reduction framework, with Chinese buyers typically booking new-crop supplies from August (Trading Economics, AgWeb).

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) Thin and lagging the France/China headlines — no contradicting signal (TradingView corn ideas).

What it means. The August new-crop booking window gives the China framework a concrete near-term test — if Chinese cargoes show up next month, this holds or upgrades; if US pollination weather turns benign and bookings disappoint, the rally stalls. Watch weekly export sales from early August.

Soybeans 0 Neutral / mixed

What's happening. Beans remain the laggard: front months slipped fractions into the weekend, cash firmed slightly (~$10.89), old-crop export sales sit at a marketing-year low — but the US-China reciprocal tariff framework covering agriculture keeps a floor under the story (Trading Economics, Farm Progress).

Social pulse. (From the 22:15 sweep.) No fresh social signal — chatter dominated by stale positioning posts (TradingView soybean ideas).

What it means. Same test as corn but with more riding on it: China is over 60% of global soybean trade, so the August new-crop booking season will decide whether the tariff framework converts into the demand that beans currently lack. Until cargoes book, big stocks cap the upside.
